

Davey's Boy death...

I think it is more sorry than sad. Sorry because Davey let circumstances control him instead of digging down and conquering the circumstances of the challenges set before him. You “abuse” something long enough, it gets its revenge.

Make no mistake about it -- Davey died at 39 years of age because he chose to. The choices he was making led him to an early death. He, and he alone, killed himself prematurely. But few want to accept what is true.

drug addict dies. the living lie.

Posted in Uncategorized on February 6th, 2008

"In a statement released through Ledger's publicist, the actor's father, Kim, said Wednesday: 'While no medications were taken in excess, we learned today the combination of doctor-prescribed drugs proved lethal for our boy. Heath's accidental death serves as a caution to the hidden dangers of combining prescription medication, even at low dosage.'"

No excess? Are you f'ing kidding me!! What, was he preparing for the next "Elephant Man" movie or what? He certainly took enough drugs to kill one.

He didn't know what the stuff was but he bought it all because on the reservations they can sell anything legally and he figured eventually some white man would come through and know what it all was, buy it and he'd make a huge profit. Well, I knew what it was, but he also knew who I was. And, naturally, he was more impressed by who I was than I was by what he had. He also believed we had this whole cosmic "You're a warrior, I'm a warrior..." connection thing going on. And he was so into it I just didn't have it in me to disappoint him and tell him we really didn't have a connection thing going on because Ultimate Warrior, as a persona, was never created around his being an indian in the classic cowboys and indians sense. The truth is, I side with the cowboys not the indians, and I consider myself a Native American in the accurate sense. Moreover, I don't really appreciate that the indians, the bow and arrow kind, use the term in the misleading way that they for too long have. I mean, I was born here, in America, so I, too, am a Native American. I don't have to say my ancestors lived in a teepee and wore feathers in their hair, or yelp like a hyena or weave blankets or burn smudge sticks and smoke tax-free cigarettes to know I am one. Neither do you if you were born here. But we'll save that politically-incorrect discussion for another time. So, anyway, I went along with the roleplaying he was doing and used his belief to my advantage and negotiated with him until he took a pair of my underwear that I agreed to draw my Ultimate Warrior logo on, which he knew would always thereafter hold special powers. Funny, huh? Be back a little later to discuss my experiment — and many other things.

Even those you might expect to stand up for regard of the law are, in the way they are handling the coverage of this, confessing their own ignorance and two-faced deceit. Many presumably knowledgeable pundits (including conservative Fox News personalities) have said, "Paris isn't being treated fairly, she's definitely getting a raw deal."

Like hell she is. What and Who are getting a raw deal are our laws and the law-abiding citizens of this country. Laws are not unfair or fair. The law is simply THE LAW. It just IS. What the law is, is what the law is. Plain and simple. Laws are not (supposed) to be subject to relativity. Once they are, they are no longer laws. We can, again, thank the deteriorated culture and its relativity that this "anarchy" is becoming more and more the case. Using previous instances of leniency shown to other celebrity lawbreakers, some even committing more serious crimes, is not the gauge to use to determine appropriate punishment for Paris. The punishments already on the books are! Just as it was in every other lenient punishment enforcement instance before now. Unfortunately, in those previous instances no one was paying attention to it as so many are now because of the frenzied media debate going on. The leniency that was applied wrongly before is not what anyone should be using now, to judge what is fair or unfair for Paris. Instead of once again using popularity, feelings and program ratings to rationalize continued leniency, what should be done is that an end is put to any more tolerance of it once and for all. Once punishment for breaking the law is determined by popularity, celebrity status and money, those who don't have these things, yet have the decency and discipline to abide by the laws, are the very ones being treated unfairly and getting the raw deal.

If Paris Hilton is the prostitute now finding herself being made the example, so be it. We all come to make the beds we lie in. She's made others, too. And you can bet it's not the filthiest one she's ever been handcuffed to. Give me a break. She's an absolute tramp. Her $1000 and ounce perfumes can't begin to conceal her slutty stench.

2) I am not dead. Nor have I ever died. Don't laugh. There are plenty of kooks (too many) who write and inform me that I am or that I have — and then demand I write back and confirm it!

3) I lead an active, constructive and fulfilling life. Despite inaccurate rumors, vindictive mischaracterizations, and flagrant defamation claiming otherwise, the reality is I have built an incredibly empowered life on my OWN terms. As a devoted husband and father, I could not have custom-ordered a more loving, healthy, spirit-filled, and happy home life. And as a man who has throughout his whole life been inspired by the setting of new goals and their different challenges, and the ability to think for oneself which accompanies these, my day-to-day life environment is creative, productive, and positive.

To find those who truly have self-destructed, keep your eye on the obituaries and visit the gravesides of other WWF/E talent who've died of various forms of self-indulgence, beginning with their refusal to mature as real men and grow up and act their age. When you are done there, go look into the hollow-souled eyes of those Sports Entertainment figures you once thought defiant, strong, proud, and independent who've crawled back into the cave to have their minds, lives and characters controlled because they were afraid of being real men, afraid of the real world and real challenges, and felt safer, as Plato showed us, viewing the shadows from the inside.

If you've believed any of these rumors you were duped. Plain and simple. If you want to continue to believe them — as some, for whatever sick reason, do — then I can assure you the objective, sane, clearheaded thinking going on here will be of little interest to you.

MIND.

WARRIOR TALKS

"Engagement of the mind and education are the answer to everything. The answer lies in being human, not using human as an excuse." - Warrior Wisdom

Information

BIO

Education Supplement

Feedback and Reviews

Resources

To contact Warrior to discuss bookings for speaking engagements at personal, public and corporate events:

mrwarrior@earthlink.net

His actual speech - "The Destruction of Diversity" - was very interesting. Warrior is a strong conservative and a Republican, although he did stress that he believes in conservative philosophies - not necessarily all the political affiliations that go along with conservatism. He is very into the potential of human life and living your life morally, with honor. He explained what conservatism stood for, and was pretty clear about his negative views on liberalism eating away at what America stands for. He said America is the greatest nation in the world hands down, and he was sickened how many immigrants (legal and not) come to this country looking for handouts and are not willing to assimilate into American society and defend American rights and beliefs. He made it clear that he wasn't against people coming here and practicing their own faiths, but its people who come here and try to make America into their country that he didn't like. He feels that the things that America stands for are rotting away - and that immigration is a large part of it.

It was a great speech, and I am honored that I got to meet the guy who was really a larger-than-life figure to myself as a child as well as legions of others.

I chose not to do that because I have more pride in myself simply as human being, putting aside any celebrity I earned, and I'm also not any good at sitting in my own pile of shit. It is my own personal opinion that people who over and over again choose to act stupid, weak and anti-human should no longer be allowed to interact with those of us that choose not to. Let your own imagination take it from there... Guys like Darryl Strawberry and Scott Hall and Robert Downey, Jr. and Mike Tyson, etc. should at the least be confined till death do we part in a place with all their recidivist others, and at best terminated so as to protect the future gene pool. There is no help for those who won't help themselves. I have no sympathy to offer here. And believe me, I won't in my life be begging for any either. The worst times in life, anyone's life, still hold the best thing about it -- Having it. Respect it and don't abuse it.

SO WHAT these people don't have as much as I do. I don't have as much as many others. But that doesn't make me entitled to it, make it possible for me to demand that it gets spread around, that I get a bigger share because there are those with bigger shares. But, now, Bush, our loving robotic Republican President, has taken the inequality bait thrown out by black leaders who are nothing less than pure-bred racists and we are going to ideologically revisit the 1800's and begin the debate over inequality all over again. As a result, he also, compassionate conservative that he is, took one giant, despicable leap toward America's inevitable Marxist, Communist and Socialist philosophy of government. With all due disrespect, Al Sharptons and Jesse Jacksons of the world, all you black leaders who demand reparations and want to see white people in shackles and hanging from nooses should just have a little more patience. At the p/c pace we are going now, it won't be long before we are all slaves.

Common sense, self-restraint and disciplined thinking are less and less to be found any more, anywhere. In just over 100 years, a time back when this country fostered its greatest achievements, our populous has deteriorated itself to subhuman standards. No wonder our government subsidizes so much time and money to the study of primates -- it's socialism's plan for the future: learn how to survive swinging from trees and sustaining ourselves on a diet solely of bananas and TV (perfect for propaganda and other mind-altering crap).

Billary tells us he prodded thy young, sluttish cow named Lewinsky "because I could." There's your epitaph, Clinton. Fits the pragmatic, patheticness of your life perfectly, and all that your cause stands for. Till the day that you grace our world with your departure, why not use it as the slogan for the gang you lead, Liberalism as it defines itself today? Decent, responsible people and mature, dependable adults don't go around doing things because they could, they do what they "ought to do."

Civilization depends on it. Perhaps all the women raising you, who you vulgarly blame so much on, didn't teach you that Mr. former Leader of the Free World. What about that Mr. Intelligentsia? What are we -- monkeys or human beings? What'd you say we go ask that decent and mature and civilized James Carville?

have a connection thing going on because Ultimate Warrior, as a persona, was never created around his being an indian in the classic cowboys and indians sense. The truth is, I side with the cowboys not the indians, and I consider myself a Native American in the accurate sense. Moreover, I don't really appreciate that the indians, the bow and arrow kind, use the term in the misleading way that they for too long have. I mean, I was born here, in America, so I, too, am a Native American. I don't have to say my ancestors lived in a teepee and wore feathers in their hair, or yelp like a hyena or weave blankets or burn smudge sticks and smoke tax-free cigarettes to know I am one. Neither do you if you were born here. But we'll save that politically-incorrect discussion for another time. So, anyway, I went along with the roleplaying he was doing and used his belief to my advantage and negotiated with him until he took a pair of my underwear that I agreed to draw my Ultimate Warrior logo on, which he knew would always thereafter hold special powers. Funny, huh? Be back a little later to discuss my experiment — and many other things.

have a connection thing going on because Ultimate Warrior, as a persona, was never created around his being an indian in the classic cowboys and indians sense. The truth is, I side with the cowboys not the indians, and I consider myself a Native American in the accurate sense. Moreover, I don't really appreciate that the indians, the bow and arrow kind, use the term in the misleading way that they for too long have. I mean, I was born here, in America, so I, too, am a Native American. I don't have to say my ancestors lived in a teepee and wore feathers in their hair, or yelp like a hyena or weave blankets or burn smudge sticks and smoke tax-free cigarettes to know I am one. Neither do you if you were born here. But we'll save that politically-incorrect discussion for another time. So, anyway, I went along with the roleplaying he was doing and used his belief to my advantage and negotiated with him until he took a pair of my underwear that I agreed to draw my Ultimate Warrior logo on, which he knew would always thereafter hold special powers. Funny, huh? Be back a little later to discuss my experiment — and many other things.

As a role model always on guard to stand accountable while in entertainment, it has long been my position that "celebrity" alone to define role-modeling is a crutch too easily and sorrily resorted to. As it matters to humanity there is no greater role to be modeled than the role of a rationally mannered human being, manifested through one's own thinking and acting. All opposing arguments are simply canards. An example set is an example learned. And as such, always has an excellent chance of being replicated. We are all role models, all teaching by example -- All the time.

In the mid to late '90's the entire entertainment industry took a harsh debasing and perverse creative turn -- Sports Entertainment pushing the provocative envelope farthest. I decided that as an adult male role model, one heavily influencing young people through the premiere celebrity character's conduct I portrayed, that I was not okay with the new creative course -- or, to put it barefaced: rationalizing puerile, dissolute behaviors by insisting I was only an actor acting. As I have stated many times before: my absence from the entertainment business is not what has caused me to become a more responsible, mature adult, it was the becoming of a more responsible, mature adult that caused me to choose absence. With all that we cannot find the time or resources to do, when we grow up we should think and act like it.

It may produce a hearty chuckle but it is absolutely true: I educated myself of how to achieve success in Sports Entertainment. Typically people tend to view success in entertainment as something more romantic and magical, mysterious even, but there was nothing happenstance or fickle about my own. Except in the way of the wise adage: "The harder I worked the luckier I got" luck had nothing to do with my success. Facing reality and using an educated mind did. To think was to know, to know was to solve.